FOREWORD

The success obtained by Mr. Royce's Balzac Bibliography and the general tone of the reviews on both sides of the water encourage the publication of this supplement. In fact, the main criticism passed on the original work was that the very wealth of material called for a thorough Index. Considerations of space and time forbade its inclusion in the first volume. But the critical objection is at length answered. Valuable as Royce's bibliography is, it becomes invaluable to the student and amateur of realistic fiction through the abundance of references here furnished. Neither volume is complete without the other.

The "Index by Periodicals" in which Balzac is treated connects with Part II of the original Bibliography. The arrangement of item-numbers is chronological under each journal and thus, if worked out, will chart certain waves of enthusiasm for Balzac, or the reverse. Further, if a reader desires to know what or how many articles on the novelist have been printed in the Nation or in the Revue des deux mondes, this list will promptly guide him to the appropriate titles.

Much more elaborate, the "Topical Index" provides references on every aspect of Balzac's life and works—the two Parts being thus designated. The item-numbers refer to practically every title, whether of book or magazine article, in the original Bibliography. No titles subsequent to December, 1927, are found in either volume—a deficiency which may be ultimately remedied. Here certain important numbers (e.g., 60 or 1216, referring respectively to Baldensperger and Spoelberch de Lovenjoul) often recur. It has been the compiler's aim to analyze the various facets of Balzac criticism or the different types of information contained in each important title. Preliminary analyses of such works have been made comprehensive. When in doubt, our policy has been to include, rather than omit, a given item under a particular heading. Cross-references under various headings point to additional items. A number within parentheses indicates a review of the immediately preceding number. A school text is indicated by an appropriate abbreviation.

A glance at the Table of Contents will suggest where material on the more comprehensive topics may be found. The attention of all students is directed to the general references given under Section VI of Part I and Section V of Part II. But since the subdivisions in each Part are very numerous, it has seemed best to append a final Page Index referring to these headings in the body of the work. Our intention is to offer all possible aids, not only to the Balzacians, but to others interested in the art of fiction or in the life of the writer whom Henry James recognized as "the master of us all."

In making analyses of items, the compiler has been assisted by Professor W. S. Hastings (who also kindly aided in planning the Topical Index), as well as by Mr. N. E. Saxe, Miss Kathryn Miller, and the editor. To Miss Mary D. Alexander, of the University of Chicago Press, has been intrusted the preparation of the Page Index. The task of seeing the volume through the Press has been shared with Mr. W. L. Crain. The Balzac Project is particularly indebted to the Humanities Research Fund, allotted by the General Education Board, for aid in the completion of this as of other volumes in the series.

NOTE.—In the following roster the compiler has attempted to list, though not completely, those individuals whose activities have been considerably influenced by their zeal for Honoré de Balzac. These persons form an increasing phalanx, extending from Balzac's life to the present day, and covering the civilized world.

Most of the following names will be readily found listed alphabetically as authors, in the Royce Bibliography, so the item numbers of their entries need not be repeated here; but where further evidence of an interest in Balzac is to be found, the references are given.
